Dear Titan Fuel Tanks,

Thank god for my Titan fuel tank. On September 9th 2008 I was in Savannah taking the new Georgia state general contractors licenses when my wife frantically called me about the approaching hurricane Ike. I abandoned the exam and caught the next available flight back to Houston.

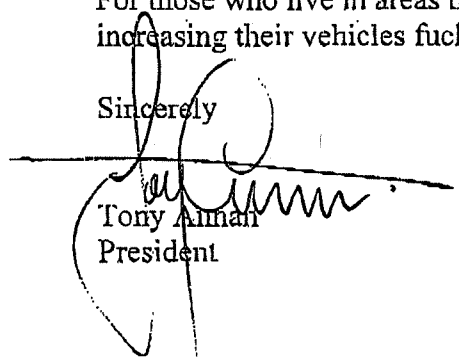

When I arrived in Houston the city was in panic mode, traffic was backed up for miles, and gas stations had huge lines as millions of people were trying to evacuate. I headed south to Friendswood in Galveston County to pick up my family when I realized I had less than half a tank of diesel.

With no luck finding diesel on my rout home I added what little fuel I had in the garage to give me just under three quarters of a tank. I quickly boarded up a few windows, loaded the family and evacuated to Austin. Hundreds of vehicles were abandoned on the side of the road, some abandoned right at the pump station, all because they had run out of fuel.

Ten grueling hours later, and with no additional fuel found during the 200 plus mile journey, we made it safely to our friend's home just north of Austin. All with nearly a quarter tank to spare. Hurricane Ike hit Houston later that evening.

For those who live in areas that are prone to disasters I strongly urge them to consider increasing their vehicles fuel capacity, and I personally vouch for Titan tanks.

Sincerely

Tony Allan
